The Lowell Cemetery

The Lowell Cemetery was dedicated 175 years ago on June 20, 1841 as a private, non-sectarian, non-profit cemetery. It was modeled after Mt. Auburn Cemetery in Cambridge, which was organized a few years earlier as the first garden cemetery in America.

These new cemeteries emphasized the physical beauty of the surroundings and created a restful sanctuary for those contemplating the departed, which was in sharp contrast to earlier burial grounds, crowded and unorganized, sometimes dispassionate and severe.

Designed by eminent surveyor, George P. Worcester, the Lowell Cemetery was chosen for its natural setting of hillocks and trees. Worcester incorporated onto the landscape curved roads and paths under a planned canopy of oaks, beeches and ashes.

As the Cemetery grew, local citizens memorialized their dead with elaborate carvings of stone, and the grounds became a depository of cemetery art. Many of these stones are designed by local artists to be studied and admired. Some are even carved by internationally famous sculptors.

Majestic gateways and a recently dedicated architecturally significant columbarium have added greatly to the beauty of the site, now comprising 85 acres.

A visit to the Cemetery today and an examination of the stones and tombs all evoke memories of Lowell's past and the lives of some of its most prominent citizens who played key roles in the development of their city, state and nation.
